

The white horse theater came back to our school with a new, extraordinary play.

Presenting “Strange Case of Dr Jekyll and Mr. Hyde”, the actors introduced the conflict between the good and the bad in people to the audience.

In the play, the protagonist Dr Jekyll drinks a potion to transform into his hateful self-Mr.Hyde to release all his frustration and anger to the world. Slowly his evil persona takes full possession of his soul.

Overall, the play was enjoyable to watch, the actors did an incredible job portraying the characters and their feelings. Arriving with only 4 actors to the school, the group managed to play over 10 different characters on stage.

However, I do recommend watching a trailer or introduce the students to the play beforehand to make them understand the plot better.

As a personal opinion, the ending came quite sudden and the audience had small difficulties to understand that this was really the end of the play. I would have preferred a clearer ending or a sort of sign, like the lights going out to signify the plays end.

Concluding my final thoughts, I definitely recommend inviting the acting group again and let other classes experience a well-acted and pleasant show.
